Pre-orders for the new iPhone 17 begin on Friday, September 12, 2025.

And the official release — when the phone becomes available in stores and starts shipping to customers — is set for Friday, September 19, 2025.

What Exactly Launches—Models & Variants

The iPhone 17 launch in 2025 isn't just a single device. The full new lineup includes:

- The standard iPhone 17
- An ultra-thin variant, termed (replacing the previous "Plus" model)

This diversification aims to give buyers a broader choice depending on their needs — from a sleek and light model to a full-feature Pro device.

What Changed Compared to Previous iPhones—Why the Launch Matters

With iPhone 17, Apple delivers several upgrades that make this launch notable:

- A larger and brighter display — a 6.3-inch Super Retina XDR panel with ProMotion for smoother scrolling and better visuals.
- Upgraded cameras: a powerful 48 MP Dual Fusion main rear camera system plus a new "Center Stage" front camera that enhances selfie and video calls.
- Base storage increased: entry-level iPhone 17 now starts at 256 GB.
- Improved durability and build materials: tougher "Ceramic Shield 2" front cover with enhanced scratch resistance and reduced glare.
- Performance boost: powered by the new A19 chip for faster CPU/GPU, better power efficiency, and enhanced camera/image processing.

These enhancements make the iPhone 17 generation a meaningful upgrade for users who value display quality, camera improvements, better performance, and long-term durability — especially compared to older models like iPhone 15 or iPhone 16.

When to Expect iPhone 17 in Different Regions (Including Europe)

Apple states that pre-orders begin globally on September 12, 2025.

Retail availability then follows on September 19, 2025 — the date when many stores and carriers around the world will start selling the device.

In some additional countries and regions, certain models might only become available slightly later (sometimes around a week after initial launch), depending on supply and logistics.

What This Launch Means for Buyers & Early Adopters

If you plan to upgrade — especially if you care about modern performance and future-proofing — the iPhone 17 launch provides a strong opportunity. The features and storage improvements may be especially attractive to users coming from much older iPhone models.

For those who want to be among the first to get the new iPhone, pre-ordering on September 12 is recommended: initial stock tends to sell out fast, especially for popular colors and Pro-level models. Retailers may even see strong demand for certain variants, so acting early helps.

Finally, if you are outside the U.S., note that availability may vary by country and region — but Apple's global rollout has historically covered many major markets within the first wave of release.
